The Business Case for Legal Compliance Management

Regulations are constantly changing and your organization is changing too, with new machinery, staff and expansions. Staying on top of your requirements is a big challenge. If you have an environmental management system, such as ISO 14001, you must also demonstrate your compliance history.

The typical practice of tracking compliance obligations in Excel, Word and sporadic newsletters can be cumbersome and even dangerous. Maintaining data spread out over different documents, while your organization evolves and regulations change, makes figuring out your compliance issues a convoluted task.

Do you outline how each legal requirement and standard apply to your organization?

Yes	23	79.3%
No	5	17.2%
Do I need to?	1	3.4%

This recent poll of facility managers in different industries found that nearly 20% do not understand how their legal requirements apply to their organization. Though many businesses can outline how their legal requirements apply, many are basing their understanding on out-of-date documents. The external consultants who provided these documents have long since finished their mandate and left the time-consuming process of interpreting and updating legal requirements to facility managers.

In the 21st century, modern businesses are turning to digital solutions to reduce time and improve coverage. With a centralized digital solution, a team of auditors, inspectors and plant managers can quickly see what an operation needs to do to stay compliant and what has recently changed. Nimonik would be thrilled to help you upgrade your EHS legal compliance program to ensure you can demonstrate ongoing compliance.
